

WHERE DO YOUR NICKELS GO?

Buckelew Programs is the North Bay's largest nonprofit provider of mental health and substance use treatment services, including supported housing and suicide prevention. Since 1970, thousands have turned to the organization to begin healing, find stability, and build more independent lives.

The organization meets people where they are—especially those with low or no income who face the greatest barriers to care—with programs rooted in dignity, compassion, and respect. In addition, Buckelew Programs supports families and strengthens communities through public education and prevention.

Buckelew Programs provides a wide range of services to support mental health and recovery in the North Bay. Its counseling services offer compassionate support for individuals, couples, youth, and families. Through service navigation, the organization helps people facing behavioral health challenges by offering education and guidance.

For those struggling with substance use, Buckelew offers treatment and recovery programs including detox, residential treatment, and sober living homes. Its suicide prevention efforts include operating the 988 hotline, conducting community outreach, and providing grief support for those impacted by loss. In addition, Buckelew Programs offers supported housing, ensuring safe housing and case management for adults living with complex behavioral health challenges.
